

The march of the gig economy workers continues

Another Tribunal case confirms that those classified as self employed are not in fact self employed. For me, Judges are not immune to what is going on in the newspapers and Parliament and anyone advising in relation to a gig economy case has to bear this in mind. I think many Judges will want to find for employees in this context and they'll need to be faced with pretty determined lawyers to make such a finding very difficult.

Drivers for London-based minicab company Addison Lee could be owed wages and holiday pay after an employment tribunal test case found that some had been wrongly classed as self-employed.

<https://www.theguardian.com/money/2017/sep/25/addison-lee-wrongly-classed-drivers-as-self-employed-tribunal-rules>

