

Just when you were waiting for a new gig economy case...

... two come along at once!

This time, it is the turn of Addison Lee, the taxi and courier company, to fight their corner in the Central London Employment Tribunal against the GMB.

The Union claims that Addison Lee drivers are workers, who have the right to the minimum wage and holiday pay.

If recent decisions are anything to go by, Addison Lee will be preparing themselves for a tough time in the Tribunal...

London-based Addison Lee is the latest taxi and courier company to have its drivers' worker status called into question at the Central London employment tribunal

PT <http://www.personneltoday.com/hr/addison-lee-worker-status-tribunal-hearing-begins/>

