Matthew began pupillage in 2023. He has a broad interest in all areas of chambers' work.

Prior to pupillage, Matthew joined the automated vehicles project at the Law Commission of England and Wales, whose report recommended new legislation for the safe introduction of self-driving cars.

Matthew studied Law at Newcastle University and completed the BPTC at BPP University, London, before being called to the Bar in 2021.

Since graduating, Matthew has amassed a wide range of litigation experience, providing support to the New Zealand Government's counsel and working for a specialist civil litigation firm. He also volunteered at Barnardos, advancing policy change and providing advice on potential breaches of children's rights.
